

What is CRISPR-Cas?

The Cas protein is an enzyme that acts as molecular scissors and can cut the genetic material at certain points. CRISPR (Clustered Regularly Interspaced Short Palindromic Repeats) refers to short repetitive DNA sequences in the genetic material of bacteria that can serve as a kind of archive for viral genetic material fragments in order to recognise attackers when they re-infect.